Zonurus, zo-nu'-rus, s. a saurian lizard, having the head covered with regular polygonal shields.

Zoochemical, zo-o-ke-m'-e-kal, a. pertaining to animal chemistry (Gr. zoon, an animal, and chemica).

Zoochemy, zo-ok'-e-me, s. animal chemistry.

Zoogeny, zo-ôj'-e-ne, s. the doctrine of animal formation (Gr. zoon, an animal, and gennao, to produce).

Zoography, zo-ôg'-ra-fer, s. one who describes animals, their forms and habits.

Zoographical, zo-o-graf'-e-kal, a. pertaining to the description of animals.

Zoography, zo-ôg'-raf-e, s. a description of animals, their forms and habits (Gr. zoon, and grapho, to write).

Zoolite.

Zoolatry, zo-ôl'-â-tre, s. the worship of animals (Gr. zoon, and latreia, worship).

Zoolite, zo'-o-lite, s. an animal substance, petrified, or fossil (Gr. zoon, and lithos, a stone).

Zoolithology, zo-o-li-thol'-o-je, s. a treatise on fossil animal remains (Gr. zoon, lithos, and logos, science).

Zoological, zo-o-loj'-e-kal, a. pertaining to zoology.

Zoologically, zo-o-loj'-e-kal-je, ad. according to the principles of zoology.

Zoologist, zo-ôl'-o-jist, s. one who is well versed in the natural history of animals.

Zoology, zo-ôl'-o-je, s. that part of natural history which treats of the structure, habits, classification, and habitations of all animals, from man to the lowest of all the tribes (Gr. zoon, and logos, science).

Zoomorphic, zo-o-mor'-fik, a. after an animal form.

Zoomorphism, zo-o-mor'-fiz-m, s. representation in animal form or forms (Gr. zoon, and morphe, shape).

Zoonic, zo-on'-ik, a. pertaining to animals; obtained from animal substances.

Zoonomia, zo-o-no'-me-â, s. zoonomy.

Zoonomy, zo-on'-o-me, s. the laws of animal life, or the science which treats of the phenomena of animal life, their causes and relations (Gr. zoon, an animal, and nomos, a law).

Zoopathology, zo-o-pâ-thol'-o-je, s. the doctrine of the diseases of animals.

Zoophagion, zo-ôl'-agon, s.; pl. Zoophaga; an animal that attacks others alive and feeds on them (Gr. zoon, and phago, to eat).

Zoophagous, zo-ôl'-â-gus, a. feeding on animals.

Zoophily, zo-ôl'-e-le, s. fondness for animals (Gr. zoon, and philia, love).

Zoophyte, zo-ôl'-ite, s. See Zoophyte.

Zoophoric, zo-o-for'-ik, a. applied to a column which supports the figure of an animal [Arch.] (Gr. zoon, and phero, to bear.)

Zoophorus, zo-ôl'-o-rus, s. the same with the frieze in modern architecture; s. part between the architrave and cornice, so called from the figures of animals carved upon it [Ancient Arch.]

Zoophyte, zo-ôl'-ite, s. a term applied to simple polyps and compound individuals consisting of many polyps united together, thus forming the connecting link between plants and animals, as corals, sponges, &c. (Gr. zoon, and phyton, a plant).

Zoophysiology, zo-o-fiz'-o-l'-o-je, s. animal physiology (Gr. zoon, and physiology).

Zoophytes, zo-o-ft'-ik, a. pertaining to zoophytes.

Zoophytological, zo-o-ft'-o-l'-o-je-kal, a. pertaining to zoophytology.

Zoophytology, zo-o-ft'-o-l'-o-je, s. natural history of zoophytes (Gr. zoon, and phyton, and logos, science).

Zoosperm, zo'-o-sperm, s. one of the spermatozoa of an animal (Gr. zoon, and sperma, seed).

Zoospore, zo'-o-spore, s. the spore of an acotyledonous plant, so-called because it moves as if alive after it is discharged from the spore-case (Gr. zoon, and spore).

Zootomical, zo-o-tom'-e-kal, a. pertaining to zootomy.

Zootomist, zo-ôl'-o-mist, s. one who dissects the bodies of animals.

Zootomy, zo-ôl'-o-me, s. the anatomy or dissection of animals for the purpose of discovering their structure, the functions of their several parts, &c. (Gr. zoon, and tome, cutting).

Zopissa, zo-pis'-sâ, s. pitch scraped off from the sides of ships, and then tempered with wax and salt.

Zoril, zor'-il, s. a S. American variety of the skunk.

Zoroastrian, zo-ro-as'-tre-an, a. pertaining to Zoroaster, the founder of the religion of the Magi or Persians; pertaining to the system of Zoroaster.

Zulu, zool'-loo, s. one of a S. African Kafir race in the north of Natal.

Zumbooruk, zoom-boô'-ruk, s. a swivel gun mounted on the back of a camel.

Zuna, zew'-na, s. a singular kind of sheep found in Angola, with a slender and almost naked tail hanging to the ground.

Zurlike, zur'-lite, s. a Vesuvian mineral.

Zygodactyl, zig-o-dak'-til'-ik, a. having the toes applied to those birds whose feet have two anterior and two posterior toes, like the parrot or cuckoo (Gr. zygon, a yoke, and dactylos, a toe or finger).

Zygomatic, zig-o-mat'-ik, a. pertaining to the zygoma, or cheek-bone [Anat.] Zygomatic muscles are two muscles of the face, which rise from the zygomatic bone, and are inserted into the corner of the mouth.

Zygomatic processes, the processes of the temporal and cheek bones, which unite to form the zygomatic arch.

Zygomatic suture, the suture which joins the zygomatic processes of the temporal and cheek bones. (Gr. zygon, a yoke).

Zygophyllum, zig-o-flil'-um, s. a genus of plants, including the bean caper (Gr. zygon, and phyllon, a leaf).

Zymate, zi'-mate, s. a supposed compound of the Zumate, zu'-mate, s. imaginary zymic acid with a base.

Zymic acid, zi'-mic-as'-id, s. a supposed peculiar acid obtained by the acetous fermentation of vegetable substances.

Zymological, zi-mo-lôl'-e-kal, a. pertaining to zymology.

Zymologist, zi-môl'-o-jist, s. one who is skilled in the fermentation of liquors.

Zymology, zi-môl'-o-je, s. a treatise on the fermentation of liquors, or the doctrine of fermentation (Gr. zyme, leaven, and logos, science).

Zymome, s. zi'-mome, s. one of the supposed proximate principles of the gluten of wheat.

Zymometer, zi-mom'-e-ter, s. an instrument for ascertaining the degree of fermentation occasioned by the mixture of different liquids (Gr. zyme, zymosis, and meter).

Zymosis, zi-môl'-sis, s. an epidemic or endemic contagious affection, due to some morbid agent fermenting in the system (Gr. fermentation).

Zymotechny, zim-o-tek'-ne, s. the art of exciting fermentation (Gr. zyme, and techné, art).

Zymotic, zi-môl'-ik, a. pertaining to or produced by zymosis. Zymotically, zi-môl'-e-kal-le, ad. in a zymotic manner.

Zythepary, zi-her'-zâ-re, s. a brewery or brew-house.

Zythum, zi'-thum, s. a beverage; a liquor made from malt and wheat (Gr. zythos).

PRONUNCIATION

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

"THE pronunciation of the learned languages" (says Walker, in his 'Key to Classical Pronunciation') "is much more easily acquired than that of our own. Whatever might have been the variety of different dialects among the Greeks and the different provinces of the Romans, their languages, now being dead, are generally pronounced according to the respective analogies of the several languages of Europe, when those languages are cultivated without partaking of those anomalies to which the living languages are liable." But as regards the pronunciation of Greek and Latin proper names, which are of frequent occurrence in reading and conversation, the following compendious rules will be found generally useful :—

THE VOWELS.

EVERY accented vowel, not followed by a consonant is pronounced as in English, with its first, long, open sound : thus, Ca'to, Philo-me'la, Ori'on, Pho'cion, Lut'cifer, &c., have the accented vowels sounded exactly as in the English words pa'per, me'ter, spi'der, no'ble, tu'tor, &c., respectively.

Every accented vowel, followed by a consonant, has the short sound, as in English : thus, Man'lius, Pen'theus, Pin'darus, Col'chis, Cur'tius, &c., have the short sound of the accented vowels, as in man'ner, plen'ty, prin'ter, col'lar, cur'few, &c., respectively.

Every final i, though unaccented, has the long, open sound : thus, the final i forming the genitive case, as in Magis'tri, or the plural number, as in De'ci, has the long, open sound, as in vi'al; and this because the Latin i final in such cases is always long. Consequently, where the accented i is followed by i final, both are pronounced with the long diphthongal i, like the noun eye, as Achi'vi.

Every unaccented i ending a syllable not final, as that in the second syllable of Alci-biades, the Hernici, &c., is pronounced like e, as if written Alcebiades, the Hernei, &c. So also the last syllable but one of the Fabii, the Horatii, the Curatii, &c., is pronounced as if written Fa-be-i, Ho-ra-she-i, Cu-re-a-she-i; and therefore, if the unaccented i and the diphthong æ conclude a word, they are both pronounced like e, as Harpyiæ, Harpyeæ.

The diphthongs æ and œ, ending a syllable with the accent on it, are pronounced exactly like the long English e, as Cæsar, Æta, &c., as if written Cæ'sar, Æ'ta, &c.; and like the short e, when followed by a consonant in the same syllable, as Dædalus, Edipus, &c., pronounced as if written Dæ'dalus, Eddipus,

&c. The vowels ei are generally pronounced like long i. For the vowels eu in final syllables, see the word Idomeneus; and for the ou in the same syllables, see the word Antinous, and similar words in the Terminational Vocabulary.

Y is exactly under the same predicament as i. It is long when ending an accented syllable, as Cy'rus; or when ending an unaccented syllable, if final, as Æ'gy, Æ'py, &c.: short when joined to a consonant in the same syllable, as Lyc'idæ; and sometimes long and sometimes short, when ending an initial syllable not under the accent, as Lycu'rgus, pronounced with the first syllable like lie, a falsehood; and Lysim'achus with the first syllable like the first of legion, or nearly as if divided into Lys-im'-a-chus, &c.

A, ending an unaccented syllable, has the obscure sound which it has in the same situation in English words; but it has a sound bordering on the Italian a, or the a in father, as Dia'na, where the difference between the accented and unaccented a is palpable.

E final, both with and without the preceding consonant, always forms a distinct syllable, as Penelope, Hippocrene, Evoe, Amphitrite, &c. When any Greek or Latin word is Anglicized into this termination, by cutting off a syllable of the original, it then becomes an English word, and is pronounced according to our own analogy : thus, Acidalius, altered to Acidale, has the final e sunk, and is a word of three syllables only. Proserpine, from Proserpina, undergoes the same alteration. Thebes and Athens, derived from the Greek Θῆβη and Ἀθῆναι, and the Latin Thebæ and Atheneæ, are perfectly Anglicized; the former into a monosyllable, and the latter into a dissyllable: and the Greek Κρήνη and the Latin Creta have both sunk into the English monosyllable Crete; Hecate likewise, pronounced in three syllables when Latin, and in the same number when in the Greek word Ἑκάτη, is in English usually contracted into two, by sinking the final e.

The Roman magistrate, named Ædilis, is Anglicized by pronouncing it in two syllables, Æ'dile. The capital of Sicily, Syracuse, of four syllables, is made three in the English, Syr'acuse; and the city of Tyrus, of two syllables, is reduced to a monosyllable in the English, Tyre.

THE CONSONANTS.

C and G are hard before a, o, and u, as Cato, Comus, Cures, Galba, Gorgon, &c.; and soft before e, i, and y, as Cebes, Cinna, Cycnus, Geryon, Geta, Gillus, Gyges, Gymnosophistes, &c.

C, S, and T, before ia, ie, ii, io, iu, and eu, when preceded by the accent in Latin words, as in English, change into sh and zh, as Accius, Caduceus, Helvetii, Hesiod, Mæsia, Portia, Portius, Socias, Staius, Tatian, pronounced Aksheus, Cadusheus, Helveshei, Hezheod, Mezhea, Porshea, Porsheus, Sosheas, Stasheus, Tashean, &c. But when the accent is on the first of the diphthongal vowels, the preceding consonant does not change into sh, but preserves its sound pure, as Miltiades, Antiates, &c.

Proper names ending in tia, sia, cyon, and sion, when preceded by the accent, change the t, s, &c., into sh and zh. Thus Phocion, Steyon, and Cercyon are pronounced agreeably to our own analogy, as if written Phoshean, Sichean, and Sershean. Artemisia and Aspasia sound as if written Artemishea and Aspazhea; Galatia, Aratia, Alotia, and Batia, as if written Galashea, Arashea, Alo-shea, and Bashea; and if Atia, the town in Campania, is not so pronounced, it is to distinguish it from Asia, the eastern region of the world. But the termination tion (of which there not so many as twenty examples in proper names throughout the whole Greek and Latin languages) seems to preserve the t from going into sh, as the last remnant of a learned pronunciation, as if to avoid, as much as possible, assimilating with so vulgar an English termination: thus, though Æsion, Iasion, Dionysion, change the s into z, as if written Æzion, Iazion, Dionyzion, the z does not become zh; but Philistion, Gratton, Eurytion, Dotion, Androton, Hippotion, Iphition, Ornytion, Metion, Polytion, Stratton, Sotion, Eantion, Pallantion, Ætion, Hippocraton, and Amphycton, preserve the t in its true sound. Hephæstion, however, from the frequency of appearing with Alexander, has deserted the small class of his Greek companions, and joined the English multitude by rhyming with question; and Tatian and Theodotion seem perfectly Anglicized. With very few exceptions, therefore, it may be concluded that Greek and Latin proper names are pronounced alike, and that both of them follow the analogy of English pronunciation.

Ch before a vowel is always pronounced like k, as Chabrias, Cholchis, &c.; but when it comes before a mute consonant, at the beginning of a word, as in Chthonia, it is mute, and the word is pronounced as if written Thonia. Words beginning with Sche, as Schedius, Scheria, &c., are pronounced as if written Skedius, Skeria, &c.; and c before n in the Latin prænomens Cneus or Cnæus is mute: so in Cnopus, Cnossus, &c., and before t in Cteatus, and g before n in Gnidus, pronounced Nopus, Nossus, Teatus, and Nidus.

At the beginning of Greek words we frequently find the uncombinable consonants MN, TM, &c., as Mnemosyne, Mnesidamus, Mneus, Mnestheus, Tmolus, &c. These are to be pronounced with the first consonant mute, as if written Nemosyne, Nesidamus, Neus, Nesteus, Molus, &c., in the same manner as we pronounce the words bdellium, pneumatic, gnomon, mnemonics, &c., without the initial consonant. The same rule holds C hard, like K, when it comes before T, as Ctesiphon, Ctesippus, &c. Some of these words we see sometimes written with an e or i after the first consonant, as Mnestheus, Timolus, &c., and then the initial consonant is pronounced.

Ph, followed by a consonant, is mute, as Phthia, Phthiotis, pronounced Thia, Thiotis, in the same manner as the naturalized Greek word phthisic is pronounced tisic.

Ps. P is mute also in this combination, as in Psyche, Psammeticus, &c., pronounced Syke, Sammeticus, &c.

Pt. P is mute in words beginning with these letters when followed by a vowel, as Ptolemy, Pterilas, &c., pronounced Tolemy, Terilas, &c., but when followed by l, the t is heard, as in Pleptolemus, for, though we have no words of our own with these initial consonants, we have many words that end with them, and they are certainly pronounced. The same may be observed of the Z in Zmilaces.

The letters S, X, and Z require but little observation, being generally pronounced as in pure English words. It may, however, be remarked that s, at the end of words preceded by any of the vowels but e, has its pure, hissing sound, as mas, dis, os, mus, &c.; but when e precedes, it goes into the sound of z, as pes, Thersites, vates, &c. It may also be observed that, when it ends a word preceded by r or n, it has the sound of z. Thus the letter s in mens, Mars, mors, &c., has the sound as in the English words hens, stars, vars, &c. X, when beginning a word or syllable, is pronounced like z, as Xerxes.

Xenophon, &c., are pronounced Zerkez, Zenophon, &c. Z is uniformly pronounced as in English words; thus the Z in Zeno and zeugma is pronounced as we hear it in zeal, zone, &c.

QUANTITIES OF THE VOWELS IN ENGLISH.

A first vowel in words of two syllables, with but one consonant in the middle, whatever be the quantity of it in the first syllable in Greek or Latin, is always made long in English. Thus Crates, the philosopher, and crates, a hurdle; decus, honour, and dedo, to give; ovo, to triumph, and ovum, an egg; Numa, the legislator, and numen, the divinity, have the first vowel always sounded long by an English speaker, although in Latin it is short.

On the contrary, words of three syllables, with the accent on the first, and with but one consonant after the first syllable, have the vowel of that syllable pronounced short, let the Greek or Latin quantity be what it may. Thus the first vowel of regulus and remora, mimicus and minium, is pronounced short in English, though it is long in Latin; and the u in fumigo and fugito is pronounced long in both words, though in Latin the u in the latter is short. This rule is never broken but when the first syllable is followed by e or i preceding another vowel; in this case the vowel in the first syllable is long, except the vowel be i; thus lamia, genius, Libya, doceo, cupio have the accent on the first syllable, and this syllable is pronounced long in every word but Libya, though in the original it is equally short in all.

In order to reduce these rules into a small compass, that they may be more easily comprehended and remembered, it may be observed, that as we always shorten every ante-penultimate vowel but u with the primary accent, unless followed by a semi-consonant diphthong, though this ante-penultimate vowel is often long in Greek and Latin, as Æschylus, Æschines, &c.; and the ante-penultimate i, even though it be followed by such a diphthong, as Eleusinia, Oecrisia, &c.; so we shorten the first syllable of Æsculapius, Enobarbus, &c., because the first syllable of both these words has the secondary accent, but we pronounce the same vowels long in Æthiopia, Ægialeus, Haliartus, &c., because this accent is followed by a semi-consonant diphthong.

The general rule of quantity indicated by the syllabication, is, that, when a consonant ends the syllable, the vowel is always short, whether the accent be on it or not; and that, when a vowel ends a syllable with the accent on it, it is always long; that the vowel u, when it ends a syllable, is long, whether the accent be on it or not, and that the vowel i, when it ends a syllable without the accent, is pronounced like e; but if the syllable be final, it has its long, open sound, as if the accent were on it.

THE ACCENT.

Words of two syllables, either Greek or Latin, whatever be the quantity in the original, have, in English, the accent on the first syllable; and if a single consonant come between two vowels, the consonant goes to the last syllable, as Cato, Ceres, Comus, &c.

Polysyllables, when adopted without change from the Greek or Latin into English, have generally the accent of the Latin; that is, if the penultimate be long, the accent is on it, as Severus, Democedes, &c.; if short, the accent is on the ante-penultimate, as Demosthenes, Aristophanes, Posthumus, &c.

When Greek or Latin Proper Names are Anglicized, either by an alteration of the letters or by cutting off the final syllables, the accent of the original, as in appellatives under the same predicament, is transferred nearer to the beginning of the word. Thus, Proserpina has the accent on the second syllable; but when altered to Proserpine, it transfers the accent to the first. The same rule applies to Homerus, Virgilius, Horatius, &c., when Anglicized to Homer, Virgil, Horace, &c. But Acron, Arion, Amphion, Echion, Orion, Ixion, Pandion, Asion, Alphion, Arion, Ophion, Methion, Acion, Eion, Thlexion, and Sandion preserve their penultimate accent invariably; while Ethalion, a word of the same form and origin, is pronounced with the accent on the ante-penultimate, like Deucalion and Pygmalion.

The difficulty apparent here in deciding between common usage and classical propriety appears in words ending in ia, as Alexandria, Antiochia, Seleucia, Samaria, Iphigenia, and several others, which were pronounced by our ancestors, as is plain from their poetry, according to our own analogy, with the accent on the ante-penultimate syllable; and there is no doubt but every word of this form would have fallen into the same accentuation, if classical criticism had not stepped in and prevented it. Some, however, seem always to have preserved the accent of their original language, as Thalia and Sophia, although Iphigenia, Antiochia, Seleucia, and Samaria have generally yielded to the English ante-penultimate accent; and Erythia, Deidamia, Laodamia, Hippodamia, Apamia, Iithyia, and Orithyia, from their seldom appearing in mere English composition, have not often been drawn aside into plain English pronunciation. The same may be observed of words ending in nicus or rice. If they are compounded of the Greek νικη, the penultimate syllable is always long, and must have the accent, as Stratonicus, Berenice, &c.; if this termination be what is called a gentile, i.e., naming a man from his country, the penultimate is short, and the accent is on the ante penultimate, as Macedonicus, Sardonicus, Britannicus, &c.

Thus we see that many of these proper names are of dubious accentuation; and the authorities which may be produced on both sides sufficiently show us the futility of criticising beyond a certain point. It is with these as with many English words: there are some which, if mispronounced, immediately show a want of education; and there are others which, though not pronounced in the most erudite manner, stamp no imputation of ignorance or illiteracy. To have a general knowledge, therefore, of the pronunciation of these words, seems absolutely necessary for those who would appear respectable in the more respectable part of society. Perhaps no people on earth are so correct in their accentuation of proper names as the learned among the English. The Port Royal Grammar informs us that, "notwithstanding all the rules that can be given, we are often under the necessity of submitting to custom, and of accommodating our pronunciation to what is received among the learned, according to the country we are in."

But however uncertain and desultory the accentuation of many words may be, it is a great satisfaction to a speaker to know that they are so. There is a wide difference between pronouncing words of this kind ignorantly and knowingly. A person who knows that scholars themselves differ in the pronunciation of these words can always pronounce with security; but one who is unacquainted with the state of the accent is not sure that he is right when he really is so.

HEBREW AND SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

It is generally admitted that the true pronunciation of Hebrew is now lost; a few general rules, however, may be given as a guide to the pronunciation of the Hebrew proper names occurring in the Old and New Testaments. The sound of the letter g, which in Greek and Latin is soft before e, i, and y—as Gellius, Gippius, Gyas, &c., in Hebrew names is hard—as Gerizim, Gideon; except Bethphage, which, by passing through the Greek of the New Testament, has conformed itself to the Greek pronunciation.

In Hebrew names, the double letter ch, which in the English language admits of three different pronunciations (k, tch, and sh), is sounded hard like k—as Chebar, Enoch; but the words Rachel and Cherubim are Anglicised in their pronunciation, as in the English word charity, although the city of Cherub is pronounced K'erub.

The consonants c, s, and t, before ia and iu, take the sound of zh or sh, in a number of Scripture names, when preceded by an accent—as Asia, Cappadocia, Galatia, &c.

As to the vowels and diphthongs, the final i, when it forms a distinct syllable, is pronounced with a long sound—as A'i, A-ris'-a-i; but the two vowels ai are pronounced sometimes as a diphthong, as in Mor'de-cai, and sometimes as two distinct vowels, as in Hag'-ga-i. The two vowels ia, when preceded by a vowel, are sometimes pronounced as one syllable, the i sounding like y—as Isai'ah (I-sa'yah), Bena'iah (Be-na'yah); but when sounded as two syllables, the accent is on the i—as Ad-a-i'ah. When ei is followed by a vowel, the i is usually sounded like the consonant y—as Iphide'iah (If-e-de'yah). Names of Gentile origin, whether plural or singular, ending in ene, ine, and ite, are pronounced like the English formatives—as Nazarene, Philistine, Am'monite, though Magdale'ne forms an exception.

The following is an alphabetical list of SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES of more than two syllables, the accentuation and syllabication of each being duly noted. Words of only two syllables are omitted, because, as they are always accented on the first, no mistake can arise in their pronunciation.

PRONUNCIATION

EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

It accords with the general objects of a Dictionary such as this, that we should supply some useful rules for the correct pronunciation of those European names with which we are constantly meeting in the course of reading and conversation ; and these accordingly we insert here.

The four languages of Europe which most frequently come in our way are French, German, Italian and Spanish ; and therefore we shall confine ourselves to the rules which apply to them, merely premising that the Dutch, Swedish and Danish very much resemble the German in pronunciation as well as otherwise, as the Portuguese does the Spanish. A knowledge of the following rules will be helpful in pronouncing the names of many foreign places and persons.

FRENCH NAMES.

THE vowel A, in French, has two distinct sounds : the first long, found in pas, as in the English word far ; the second short, found in bat, as in hat. The circumflex â, however, has a sound broader than a in pas, being intermediate between that in far and that in full.

E has three sounds : the first short and acute, like e in met, as été ; the second open, and more prolonged, like a in hate, as tête ; and the third obscure, like e in battery, as retour.

I is distinguished by two sounds : the first found in il, nearly as in the English word fig ; the second in exil, like ie in field.

O has three sounds : the first in trône, sounded nearly as in robe ; the second in parole, sounded as in rob ; the third in corps, sounded as in lord.

U, which has no precise equivalent in English, takes nearly the vocal sound of ue in true ; although with the nasal n, as in un, it takes the sound of ung.

Y is similar to the French i.

Ai is like è or a.

Au is like o.

Ei is like è.

Eu is similar to the sound of û in tub, only more prolonged, and nearly resembles u in fur.

Ie is like ee in English, or i.

Oi usually sounds like vâ ; e.g. moi is pronounced mwaâ or mwaâh.

Ou sounds like oo in English.

B, c, d, f, k, p, t, v, and z sound the same as in English.

G, before a, o, and u, is hard, as in the English word gap ; before e, i, and y it is soft, having the sound of zh, or of s in pleasure.

Gu sounds like g hard ; thus gué, guide, are pronounced ga, gheed.

H is never pronounced in French so forcibly as in English. Some orthoëpists say that h has no sound in French.

J sounds like soft g in French, or zh in English.

L has usually the same sound as in English ; but when it ends a word preceded by i, or when ll follows i, in any situation, it usually has what is called its liquid sound. This may be said to answer nearly to the sound of li in million, the sound of l in such cases being blended with that of y (consonant) ; e.g., papillon is pronounced pâ-peel-yon' ; Chantilly, shân'-teel-ye', &c.

M and N, when followed by a vowel, or when double, have the same sound as in English ; but when at the end of a word, not immediately followed by another word beginning with a vowel, or when followed by another consonant in the middle of a word, they have what is termed the nasal sound, which resembles that of ng, as in long, pang, &c., but is somewhat softer. Thus, m and n are nasal in such words as comparer, contente, but have their natural sound in such as commune, connu.

Q or qu, in French, generally sounds like k ; e.g., quel is pronounced kel ; qui, kee, &c.

R is like the English r, but is trilled more strongly, especially when it precedes another consonant, or stands at the end of a word, as in vertu, punir : in similar cases the English r itself is but very slightly sounded.

S, when single and between two vowels, sounds like z : in other cases it is the same as in English.

X generally has the same sound as it has in English, but is sometimes sounded like s ; e.g., in six, pronounced sees, and Brussels (Brussels), pronounced Bru'-sell'; and occasionally like z, as in dixième, de'-ze'-ame'.

Ch is like sh in English: th is like t.

Gn (the same as in the Italian) has a sound which blends that of n and y (consonant), or, in other words, is equivalent to the sound of ni in minion. Thus Avignon is pronounced ä'-veen'-yong.

The vowel e at the end of a word, when not marked with an accent, is invariably mute, e.g., in parle, contente, &c.

The French consonants, when occurring at the end of a word, are generally not pronounced, unless they are immediately followed by a word beginning with a vowel; as in content, Bordeaux, and dents. If, however, they are followed by a mute e, or any other vowel, they must always be articulated, e.g., contente, dente, &c.

It may be observed that the French language has no accent in the sense in which we employ this term. The marks called accents, that are placed over the different vowels, serve only to indicate some particular sounds of these letters. Thus the accent over the e in parlé serves to show that this vowel has its first French sound, and at the same time distinguishes it from parle, another form of the same verb, in which the e is mute. The circumflex imparts to the vowels over which it is placed, a longer and deeper sound than ordinary; e.g., in hâte, tempête, gîte, and apôtre.

GERMAN NAMES.

A, in German, usually sounds as in the English word far, though it sometimes approximates the a in fat.

E, when long, sounds like a in fate; when short, like e in met: frequently, however, it has an obscure sound, like e in battery.

I, long, sounds like i in marine, or ee in English; i, short, sounds like i in pit.

O, long, is like that in no; o, short, like that in on.

U, long, is like oo in cuckoo; u, short, is like oo in good.

Y sounds like the German i.

Äe, or ä, is similar to the German e, or to the English a in fate.

Oe, or ö, nearly resembles the eu in French, but has no parallel sound in English; the sound in our language nearest to it is that of e in her, or u in fur; the German poets often rhyme it with e (ä or ë).

Ue, or ü, is like the French u.

Au is equivalent to the English ou in our.

Äu and eu resemble in sound the English oi, as in oil.

Ei and ey have the sound of i in mine.

Äi is similar to the preceding, but somewhat broader.

Ui sounds like öe.

Ie is equivalent to ee in English.

The consonants f, k, l, m, n, p, q, t, and x, are pronounced as in English.

B and d, at the beginning of a word, have the same sound as in English; at the end of a word, b is pronounced like p, and d like t.

C, before a, o, and u, sounds like k; before e, i, and y, like ts.

Ch has a sound unknown in our language, and which, consequently, can be learned from an oral instructor only. It somewhat resembles that of our h, with a strong aspiration: after a, o, and u, it is guttural: for example, in the word ach. When it follows e, i, ä, ö, ü, äu, or eu, it seems to be sounded more in the palate, as in ich.

G, at the beginning of a word, sounds as in the English word get. In other situations it should be pronounced like the German ch. In some German dialects, however, it is sounded, in all cases, nearly like g hard in English.

H is pronounced only when it begins a word.

G and h, occurring after a vowel, lengthen its sound; e.g., in Täg, Zahl, Flöh, &c.

When g and h occur in the middle of a compound word, they have the same sound as when they are initial.

J has the sound of the English y (consonant).

Q is only used before u, and sounds as in the English word quit.

R is pronounced like rr in the English word terror, but somewhat more strongly.

S, at the beginning of a word, or between two vowels, is like z; in other cases it is sharp, as in this. Ss is always sharp.

Sch sounds like the English sh; sz, like ss.

Th is pronounced like t.

V sounds like f in English, except when between two vowels; it is then usually pronounced like our v.

W resembles our v; but in pronouncing it the upper teeth should not be allowed to touch the lower lip, as is done in uttering the English v.

Z and tz sound like ts.

ITALIAN NAMES.

A, in Italian, is like the English a in far, though its sound varies somewhat in different situations.

E has two sounds: first close, as a in fate; second open, like e in met.

I is like e in me, or i in fig.

O has two sounds; first close, as in note; second open, similar to o in not, but rather broader.

U is like oo in English.

Ai and au, in Italian, are proper diphthongs. Accordingly, Cairo is to be pronounced kī-ro, and Ausa, ou'-sā, &c.

The consonants b, d, f, l, m, n, p, q, s, t, v, when immediately before a, o, or u, is never pronounced like ch, in order to express this sound in such cases, the vowel i is inserted; thus, ciao, cio, ciu, are pronounced chā, cho, choo.

K, w, x and y, are not used by the Italians, except in spelling foreign names.

C and cc, before a, o, and u, are sounded like k; before e, i, and y, like ch or tsh.

As c, when immediately before a, o, or u, is never pronounced like ch, in order to express this sound in such cases, the vowel i is inserted; thus, ciao, cio, ciu, are pronounced chā, cho, choo.

Ch is employed to express the sound of k before e and i.

G, before a, o, and u, is hard, as in the English word get; before e, i, and y, it sounds like the English j; gia, gio, giu, are pronounced jā, jō, joo.

Gh is used to express the sound of hard g before e and i.

Gli has the sound of the liquid l (l), or of li in million; thus Boglio is pronounced bole'-yo.

Gn has the same sound as in French; or, in other words, is like the Spanish n; e. g. Bologna is pronounced bo-lone'-yā.

H is never sounded in Italian.

J, at the beginning of a syllable, is like the English y (consonant); at the end of a word, it is equivalent to ii (Italian).

R resembles the French, but is trilled somewhat more strongly.

Sc, before e and i, is like the English sh; e. g. Scio is pronounced Shee'-o.

Z has commonly the sound of dz in English; zz is pronounced like ts.

SPANISH NAMES.

THE Spanish a sounds as in the English word far; e like a in ale; i like e in mete; o as in English; u like oo; and y like Spanish i.

Ai and ay are like long i in English. Au sounds like ou in our. Ei and ey are pronounced ā'-e.

The consonants f, l (single), m, n, p, s, t, v, are pronounced nearly as in English.

B at the beginning of a word sounds as in English; but when it occurs between two vowels, its sound resembles that of v, with this difference—v is pronounced with the upper teeth placed against the under lip, while the sound of the Spanish b is formed by bringing the lips loosely or feebly into contact. This sound seems to be between that of v and the English w.

C, before a, o, and u, is pronounced as in English; before e and i, it has the sound of th in the word thin. In the Catalan dialect it is the same as in English.

Ch has the same sound as in English, except in the dialect of Catalonia, where it is pronounced like k.

D, at the beginning of a word, is sounded very nearly as in English, but is pronounced with the tip of the tongue against the upper teeth, while in pronouncing the English d the tongue is made to touch the roof of the mouth.

G, before e and i, and J before every vowel, are pronounced like a strong guttural h, similar to the German ch in ach.

G, before a, o, and u, is hard, as in English.

Gua and guo sound somewhat like gwā, gwo, but the g is so soft that it is scarcely perceived; so that in these cases the sound of gu seems to approximate very nearly to that of the English w. Gu, before e and i, is usually sounded like g hard; thus, Guiana is pronounced ghe-ān'-ā.

H, in Spanish, is never pronounced, except in words beginning with hue, and then very slightly.

Ll (now sometimes written l), has a sound which combines that of l and y (consonant), and is similar to the liquid l in French; e. g. villa or vila is pronounced veel'-yā; Llerena, lyā-rā'-nā.

N, in a similar manner, unites the sounds of n and y, and is like gn in French; thus peña, is pronounced pane'-yā.

Q, in Spanish, is always followed by u. Qu, before a and o, is sounded as in English; or, in other words, equivalent to kw; before e and i it is pronounced like k, unless the u be marked with a diæresis, in which case it is like kw.

R is similar to the French, but is trilled more strongly.

T is to be pronounced by putting the tip of the tongue against the upper teeth.

X is usually sounded like the Spanish j, which letter, according to the present mode of spelling, has been generally substituted for it: thus, instead of the old spelling, Ximenes, Xucar, &c., we now see Jimenes, Jucar, &c.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF FAMILIAR PHRASES, PROVERBS, MAXIMS, QUOTATIONS, AND MOTTOES,

FROM THE LATIN, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN LANGUAGES;

WITH SUITABLE TRANSLATIONS.

When the quotation is French or Italian, it is indicated by Fr. and It., in Greek by Gr., and in German by Ger. All the rest, which constitute the great majority, are Latin. The mottoes are chiefly those of our nobility, as inscribed on their armorial bearings, and are distinguished by the letter M.

A POPULAR HISTORY OF OUR COUNTRY

History of England and the British Empire

A Record of Events—

Political, Constitutional, Naval, Military, and Literary—from B.C. 55 to A.D. 1890.

By EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A., author of "A History of the British Empire," "Outlines of the World's History," &c. With Genealogical Tables, Contents, Index, and Sixteen Maps printed in Colours. In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 5s. net.

The Popular Elocutionist and Reciter:

A Selection of Prose and Verse from the Best Authors, Past and Present.

Originally Compiled and Edited by the late J. E. CARPENTER, M.A., Ph.D., with his full instructions on the Art of Elocution. A New Edition, with Revisions and Additions. 640 pp., large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

"The special feature of this new edition has been the introduction of selections from living authors; this, while giving greater variety to the work, enables us to see many of the less familiar writers of the period at their best, and this, if for no other reason, should ensure it an extended sphere of usefulness."—Schoolmaster.

Other Men's Minds

or, Seven Thousand Choice Extracts on History, Science, Philosophy, Religion, &c.

Selected from the Standard Authors of Ancient and Modern Times, and Classified in Alphabetical Order. Edited by the Rev. E. DAVIES, D.D. New Edition. Medium 8vo, cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

"Every page glistens with gems of purest water, which cannot fail to attract and benefit their possessor."—Daily News.

"As an example of painstaking research, and a judicious or well-chosen selection from standard authors it stands unique."—Advertiser.

Chandos House, Bedford Street, Strand, London

An Invaluable Book for Clergymen, Sunday School Teachers, and for the General Study of the Bible.

"Be sure you buy a genuine unabridged Cruden, and none of the modern substitutes, good as they may be at the price. You need only one: have none but the best."—Extract from a Lecture by Rev. C. H. SPURGEON.

Cruden's Complete Concordance

TO THE

Old and New Testament,

A

DICTIONARY & ALPHABETICAL INDEX TO THE BIBLE

WITH

A Concordance to the Proper Names of the Old and New Testaments

A Complete Table of Proper Names, Meanings in the Original Languages

A Concordance to the Apocrypha,

AND

A Compendium of the Holy Scriptures, &c., &c.

EDITED BY WILLIAM YOUNGMAN.

The Titles and Prices of the Three Standard and only Unabridged Editions of this Work are as follows:

1st. THE STUDENT'S EDITION.

Super-royal 8vo, cloth gilt 3s. 6d.

2nd. THE STANDARD EDITION.

Imp. 8vo, black cloth, gilt, red edges, Steel Portrait ... 5s. 0d.

3rd. THE IMPERIAL EDITION.

Imp. 8vo, cloth gilt, bevelled boards, Steel Portrait ... 7s. 6d.

NOTE.—The advantages of these Editions over all other so-called cheap issues are that the type is new and legible; the text of Youngman's is recognised as the best, and the full Concordance of the Apocrypha is given, besides an Alphabetical List of the Proper Names in the Old and New Testament, with their Meaning or Signification in their Original Languages—a Concordance to the Proper Names—Summary of the Contents of the Holy Bible—and also a Complete Summary of the Contents of all the Chapters of the New Testament.

These New Editions are without doubt the Most Complete and the Cheapest Crudens issued, and contain more References and more Supplementary Matter of great value than any other popular Concordances.
